

Dr. Paula Owen Biography

Paula is a UK specialist in energy efficiency, behavioural change and engagement, carbon measurement & reporting tools and climate change science. She has over two decades of expertise in the environmental sustainability sector. She has a PhD in climate change science from Oxford University and is the author of numerous energy & carbon related publications that explore UK domestic energy use trends written on behalf of agencies including: Energy Saving Trust, Defra, DECC and the EU commission.

Paula has worked for a range of leading environmental not-for-profit organisations, charities, government departments and academic institutions. She is also the Founder and Director of award-winning eco action games, a social enterprise company that invents and produces innovative educational, engagement and behaviour change resources disguised as games; she has successfully sold these products into the public, academic and corporate sectors.
